One way to improve your personal statement is to use strong language. Strong language will help you to capture the attention of the admissions committee and make your statement more memorable. However, it is important to use strong language sparingly. Too much strong language can make your statement sound forced and unnatural.

To help you write a winning personal statement, we have compiled a list of hundreds of ready-to-use phrases. These phrases are organized into categories, such as starting your essay, describing your experiences, and concluding your essay. The phrases are also accompanied by tips on how to use them effectively.
