When Muhammad died in 632 CE, Umar was one of the candidates to succeed him as caliph. However, he initially supported Abu Bakr, the first caliph. After Abu Bakr's death in 634 CE, Umar was elected caliph by the Muslim community.

As caliph, Umar continued Abu Bakr's policies of expansion. He led the Muslim armies to conquer Syria, Egypt, and Persia. He also established a system of administration for the new territories.

Umar was a just and wise ruler. He was known for his piety and his love of justice. He also had a strong sense of humor. One of his most famous sayings was, "If I were to be given a piece of gold the size of Mount Uhud, I would not spend it all on myself until I had distributed it all to the poor."

Umar was assassinated by a Persian slave in 644 CE. He was succeeded by Uthman ibn Affan, the third caliph of the Rashidun Caliphate.

Umar Ibn Al Khattab was one of the most important figures in Islamic history. He was a great military leader, a wise ruler, and a just man. He played a major role in the expansion of the Muslim empire, and he established a system of administration that would last for centuries.

Umar's Legacy

Umar Ibn Al Khattab's legacy is still felt today. He is remembered as one of the greatest caliphs in Islamic history. His system of administration is still used in many Muslim countries today. And his sayings are still quoted by Muslims all over the world.

Umar Ibn Al Khattab was a great leader who left a lasting legacy. He was a man of faith, justice, and wisdom. He will always be remembered as one of the most important figures in Islamic history.
